MEL BENNETT

The Squires' second pick in the first round (behind David Thompson) in the ABA draft, Bennett signed a multi-year contract June 19... Scouting reports on the former high school All-American (Peabody, Pittsburgh), who recently completed his freshman year at Pittsburgh, say Bennett "will be a super player."..."He has unlimited potential," says Al Bianchi. "He's a good rebounder, he's strong, agile and active, he plays with enthusiasm, and we look for him to make a real contribution this season."...One of the country's most sought-after schoolboy prospects a year ago, Bennett played center for the Pennsylvania All Stars in the 1974 Dapper Dan Classic against Moses Malone, who went directly to pro stardom with the ABA Utah Stars... He made his mark almost immediately at Pitt, grabbing 17, 19 and 15 rebounds in three successive early-season games and hit a season-high 24 points in the December Steel Bowl tournament, when he was voted the tourney MVP despite the fact the Panthers lost both games... In four post-season tournament games Bennett claimed 64 rebounds (16.0) and scored 54 points (13.5) to boost his 29-game college averages to 10.2 rebounds and 10.1 points..."I'm not too excited about scoring," says Bennett. "I really look forward to blocking shots and crashing the boards."..."At just 6-7 he's a phenomenal leaper," wrote Jeff Samuels of the Pittsburgh Press in December, "and that, combined with his strength and excellent timing, make him a cinch to shatter all the Pitt rebounding records, if the pros don't grab him away first."...Pitt's loss is the Squires' gain... Displayed a great knack for going for the basket during pre-season exhibitions and showed up well against much more seasoned players.... It was Bianchi's plan to bring him along s owly, but his talent may earn him considerably more playing time early in the season.

JOBY WRIGHT

A late December addition to the Squires' roster, Joby Wright had been idle since the San Diego Sails folded. Coach Bill Musselman, who had coached Wright at San Diego, says, "He's my kind of player; he'd run through a brick wall for me if I asked him to," and Musselman asked him to report to Virginia.

The former Indiana University star who had been the Most Valuable Player in the Kiwanis-Old Dominion Classic several years ago, began his pro career in 1972-73 with the NBA Seattle SuperSonics, where he averaged 3.9 points in 77 games... He got a brief, three-game chance with the late Memphis Tams in the ABA in 1973-74, then spent the rest of that season playing in Spain... Last season he played again in Europe, this time in France.

In 10 games with the Sails Wright averaged 3.6 points. He scored a pro career high 17 points for Seattle against Phoenix in October of 1972, then matches it a month later against Portland.

TICKY BURDEN

Burden, whose 28.7 scoring average last season was fourth best among the nation's collegians, signed a multi-year contract Aug. 5... The Associated Press and Basketball Writers first-team All-American from Albany, N.Y., was the Squires fourth-round draft choice and the No. 2 pick of the NBA New York Knicks...He shot 51 per cent from the floor last season, 79 per cent from the foul line and scored a career-high 44 points in a December game against North Carolina in Greensboro..."We know he can score from outside, and as such he'll be a fine complement to Dave Twardzik and Mack Calvin," said Coach Al Bianchi. "But he can do a lot more, too. He knows how to get open and use picks and he has a good feel for the game. He's a pure shooter on the order of a Rick Mount, but I think he can probably do a little more than Mount."...Was impressive almost from the beginning in pre-season exhibitions and he admitted "I feel pretty good about the way I'm coming along so far."...With Mack Calvin and Dave Twardzik out with injuries in pre-season games, Burden was able to work on his total game—something he was denied at Utah..."They just wanted me to shoot the ball there; I guess that's how I got the reputation of being a bad defensive player."...Burden has one immodest goal: "I'd like to be Rookie of the Year. I know everybody thinks David Thompson has a lock on it, and he's a real good player and will probably deserve to win it, but I'd like to give him a run for it."...Was a teammate briefly at Utah of National League playoff star John Candelaria at Utah before the latter decided to concentrate on baseball...Burden passed up tentative pro feelers after his junior season after leading the Utes into the NIT, where he was the tournament's leading scorer with a 27-point average, and pacing the United States team in scoring in the World Games in Puerto Rico..."Ticky Burden is a great shooter and one of the best guards in the United States," said Gene Bartow, new head coach at UCLA and coach of the U. S. World Games team. "He was simply tremendous in the World Games.

MACK CALVIN

Basketball Weekly's 1975 ABA Player of the Year for his contribution to Denver's 65-19 record, Calvin was dealt to the Squires along with Mike Green and Jan van Breda Kolff July 14 for Squire veteran George Irvine and the rights to collegiate superstar David Thompson.

Initial reports, published in a Denver newspaper after the trade, hinted that Calvin might balk at reporting to Virginia, but the 6-foot, 165-pound guard quickly set the record straight.

"Some of the things I said were taken the wrong way," Calvin explained after signing a multi-year contract with the Squires. "I'm looking forward to playing in Virginia, and I'm really excited about the prospect of playing for Al Bianchi, who I have known and respected for years.

"I feel good that Virginia wants me. I want to play for a team that wants me, where the fans want me and where I can be happy. I'm going to a situation where things are improving greatly. I regard it as a personal challenge to help build the franchise. I want to be part of a winning team that we are going to have in Virginia this season."

An exhibition game left knee injury delayed his official debut as a Squire.

Calvin, a 27-year-old University of Southern California graduate, joined the Los Angeles Stars in 1969, when he was a teammate and roommate of current Squire forward Willie Wise. He played the next two seasons with the Floridians, then another two with the Carolina Cougars.

Acquired from the Carolina franchise by Denver last summer, Calvin had a superb season with the Nuggets. He averaged 19.5 points a game, set an ABA record with his .896 free throw shooting percentage, led the league in assists with 570 (7.7 a game) and was ninth in steals with 140.

Named to the All-ABA first team last season for the third time in his six-year career, Calvin has scored more than 10,000 points as a pro and has a career scoring average of 20.0

JIM EAKINS

Jim Eakins, President of the ABA Players Association who found himself temporarily out of a job when the Utah Stars abruptly folded December 2, was reclaimed by the Squires 48 hours later off the ABA waivers list.

Thus the 6-11 center who had played 463 games with the club — more than anyone else in the franchise's history — before being traded to Utah prior to last season once again became the senior Squire.

Eakins, a seven-year veteran who has a career scoring average of 12.1 and a rebound average of 8.1, had played in 425 consecutive regular-season and 62 consecutive playoff games entering this season. He has missed only two games in his entire career, both in 1969-70.

His career shooting percentage of .513 is eighth best in the league's history, and only eight others have claimed more than his 4,703 rebounds.

In 16 games with the Stars this season he had averaged 12.7 points and 9.4 rebounds, and he brought with him the league's top free throw shooting percentage — better than .900.

Eakins, a Brigham Young graduate who has done considerable post-grad work at his alma mater during the off-seasons, joined the franchise in Oakland for the 1968-69 season, the year the Oaks won the ABA championship. He played the following year with the franchise in Washington, then became a starter in 1970, the year the club moved to Virginia.

Eakins was traded along with Larry Miller to Utah in August, 1974, for Johnny Neumann, an undisclosed amount of cash and a high draft choice when the Squires decided on a youth movement. Ironically, he returns to add experience and stability.

MIKE GREEN

Mack Calvin, certainly a qualified observer although perhaps somewhat biased, says Mike Green "has become one of the best centers in the league. . . probably the best behind Artis Gilmore." Certainly there are statistics to back up these accolades heaped on the slender young man with just two years of pro experience behind him.

Last year, his first as a starter, Green was the third leading vote getter behind Gilmore and Swen Nater in the 1975 All-Star balloting, and he was one of the vital cogs in the Denver machine that rolled up a 65-19 record, the best in pro basketball.

After the Nuggets had signed 7-0 Marvin (The Human Eraser) Webster this summer, they sent Green, Calvin and Jan van Breda Kolff to the Squires for veteran George Irvine and the signing rights to David Thompson. They gave up considerable talent when they traded Green.

He averaged 17.4 points and 9.3 rebounds, was third in the ABA with 174 blocked shots and sixth in field goal shooting percentage with .544. In the playoffs he averaged 21.3 points and 9.3 rebounds to lead the Nuggets in both categories, shot 50 per cent from the field and blocked 21 shots. "I got to play," he explains, "and I think I proved I belong in the ABA."

He gets all this done with very little expression or show of emotion on the court. He explains: "I'm not the kind to get too excited, so that if things ever do go bad for me I can't get too down, either. Look, I'm having fun. This is the only job I got and I'm going to have fun."

His "fun" in the exhibition season was limited to one game by a knee injury.

Green, a native of McComb, Miss., and a four-year standout at Louisiana Tech, was drafted in the first round by both the ABA Indiana Pacers and the NBA Seattle SuperSonics; he signed with Denver, which had acquired his rights from the Pacers.

MIKE JACKSON

When he came to Virginia a year ago along with Glen Combs from Memphis for George Carter and Mike Barr, many wondered why Mike Jackson has been included in the deal. After all, he had spent the best part of his two-year pro career sitting on the bench in Utah and then Memphis. The question was: what could this young man, who looks like he'd be at home in a steel mill or a lumber camp or perhaps on the defensive line in an NFL game, do on a professional basketball court.

Jackson, too, had a question in his mind. Why had Joe Mullaney, the coach at Utah, sent him to Memphis; then, when he became the coach at Memphis, shipped him off to Virginia. "To this day, I still don't know why," says the quiet, unassuming Jackson.

That rookie year of 1972-73 was quite an experience for the young Jackson, the only first-year man on the Stars' roster. He found himself, among other things, the understudy to the wily Zelmo Beaty. "I was a center my first year with the Stars," Jackson recalled. "I'm too short (6-7) for the position, but Beaty was hurt and I was needed. And the things he taught me were tremendous. Pro basketball, particularly the inside game, is more skill than strength. It's tricks, too, little things that give you an edge."

This education of Jackson was one of the reasons the Squires were anxious to include him in the trade with Memphis. The fresh start in Virginia appealed to Jackson, who was drafted by Houston (seventh) of the NBA and Utah (ninth) after playing as a junior and senior at Cal State, L.A. "I didn't go to the Houston camp," he said. "I just went to Utah and found I liked it there."

At Cal State Jackson had been a superb 60 per cent shooter. He averaged 19.7 points over a two-year span and pulled down an average of 13.4 rebounds. He regained some of that form last season as a regular with the Squires. Starting 55 of the 82 games in which he played, Jackson averaged 12.2 points and 5.6 rebounds, while shooting 53 per cent from the floor.

JOHNNY NEUMANN

Incredibly talented as a 19- and 20-year-old out of Ole Miss a couple of seasons ago with Memphis, Neumann has been incredibly erratic since. He became Virginia property a summer ago in a trade that sent Jim Eakins and Larry Miller to Utah. He showed up in camp overweight, injured his knee slightly and after four regular-season games — all of which he started and had a chance to show Al Bianchi what he could do — he was shipped off to Indiana. But before the end of the season Indiana, too, had let him go and he became Squires property again.

What's with this young man, just turned 24 who's been a pro four years? First of all, there's no question he has telent, or at least he once had talent and not so long ago. As a sophomore at Ole Miss he led the nation in scoring with a 40.1 average and Adolph Rupp said, "Neumann is as good right now as Pete Maravich was as a senior." He was the subject of an in-depth — and not particularly complimentary — feature story in Sports Illustrated, and then he decided to turn pro with his hometown Memphis Pros.

In that first year he blasted Babe McCarthy's coaching "Johnny has the potential of being a superstar," said McCarthy, "but there's no sense in rushing him. There's no doubt he has a world of ability." Neumann's version: "If I made one mistake I got yanked out of a game." Still, Neumann averaged 18.3 points a game and made the All-Rooke team with Julius Erving, Artis Gilmore, George McGinnis and John Roche — a good year.

In his second year Neumann was outstanding. He increased his scoring average to 19.5, and, to prove to his critics he wasn't a "gunner", he contributed 470 assists. . . an average of 5.9 or nearly 12 points a game. At mid-season of the following year he was traded to Utah for Ronnie Robinson, Glen Combs and Mike Jackson (the latter two who were later to become Squires, too). The following summer he became a Squire.

FATTY TAYLOR

Here's a story of semi-irony. An off-season ago Roland Taylor, this most popular of original Squires known to everyone as Fatty, was shipped off to Denver for the Nuggets' first-round draft choice in 1975 and the rights to rookie Darrell Elston. With that first-round choice the Squires acquired the promising rookie Mel Bennett. With their own first-round choice the Squires picked David Thompson, whom they traded to Denver for Mack Calvin, Mike Green and Jan van Breda Kolff.

Now Fatty's back, too, the result of a dispersal draft transaction that saw the Squires pick Chuck Williams from the Baltimore roster, then send him to Denver for Taylor. On that same day, Elston was placed on waivers.

So now the Squires open the season with four players who helped the Nuggets to a 65-19 record.

Taylor came to Virginia with the old Washington franchise in 1970, and he has always been one of Coach Al Bianchi's favorites. Always making a contribution in whatever way he was asked — either as a reserve or as a starter — Fatty has been in the playoffs in each of his six pro seasons.

"I'm delighted to be able to get him back," said Bianchi. "I didn't want to let him go in the first place, but he had an opportunity at the time to make a better deal for himself and I would never stand in the way of that. He knows our system and I can't think of a better player to work with the other guards we have."

It is as a defensive specialist that Taylor has made his mark. A perennial selection to the ABA's All-Defensive squad selected by the league's coaches, Taylor has been among the top three "thieves" in the league since the steal statistic has been kept. Two seasons ago, playing as a Squire starter, he was fourth in the league in assists, and last season he contributed 337 assists although he was playing in a back-up role to Calvin and Ralph Simpson, who ranked first and ninth respectively in the ABA.

DAVE TWARDZIK

A three-year veteran who became the "senior" Squire with the departure of George Irvine to Denver, Twardzik extended his tenure in Virginia this summer by signing a new multi-year contract.

Coach Al Bianchi, pleased to be able to include Twardzik in his long-range plans, said, "Dave is one of the keys in our building program. He's smart, he works as hard as anyone, he plays hurt, he plays sick. He's my kind of player."

Typical of his year-long performance last season was a November game against Denver. Stricken with gastritis, a debilitating stomach virus accompanied by constant nausea and cured only by rest, Twardzik put on an incredible performance.

He played 40 minutes, scored a then career-high 25 points on just 13 shots from the field — many of them coming on daredevil drives through the Denver defense — and led the Squires to a near upset over the powerful Nuggets.

"I don't know how he did it," said Denver's Fatty Taylor, a former Squire teammate. "I'd be talking to him during the game and he could hardly talk. But when he had to do it, he did. Not many guys put out more than Dave does."

Twardzik later boosted his single-game career-high total to 27 points, and during the season set nine other career highs, including 13 assists, six steals, and in one game made 17 of 18 free throws.

Named to last season's ABA East All-Star squad, Twardzik finished third in the balloting for that game's MVP award scoring 14 points, contributing three assists and making four steals in just 15 minutes of play.

Twardzik finished the season with a 13.6 scoring average, an increase of five points over the previous year, shooting 55 per cent from the field (fourth best in the ABA) and 83 per cent from the foul line (eighth best in the league). He led the Squires in both assists (404) and steals (132) by wide margins.

JAN VAN BREDA KOLFF

VBK arrives on the Virginia scene a year later than he probably should have. One of the Squires' two first-round picks in 1974, Jan was signed by the Denver Nuggets during the period when the Virginia franchise hung in the balance before local ownership took over from Earl Foreman

Van Breda Kolff arrived along with Mack Calvin and Mike Green in the trade that sent veteran George Irvine and the signing rights to David Thompson to Denver. And he has indicated he is elated at the opportunity to get more playing time. Last year, playing behind ABA Rookie of the Year Bobby Jones, van Breda Kolff averaged 5.8 points in less than 20 minutes of playing time a game.

This season he figures to make a strong bid for the starting forward position opposite Willie Wise. He's a smart player who makes up for lack of great offensive ability by knowing how to draw fouls and pass off.

"Jan does a lot of things well," says Coach Al Bianchi, "and just needs more playing time. We drafted him No. 1 a year ago; that's what we think of him."

Growing up in a basketball family, Jan's father Bill coached college teams at Lafayette, Hofstra and Princeton and later coached the Los Angeles Lakers, Detroit Pistons, Phoenix Suns, Memphis Tams and is now coach of the New Orleans Jazz.

A prep All-American at Palos Verdes (Cal.) High School, where he also was a standout in soccer and baseball, Jan chose Vanderbilt for his college career. He was Most Valuable Player in the Southeastern Conference his senior year when he averaged 11 points and 10 rebounds. His 430 career assists remains a Vanderbilt record.

He played guard his first two seasons at Vandy, and as a junior set school single game (12) and season (147) assist records. As the team's playmaker as a sophomore VBK helped the Commodores to its first winning season in three years with a 16-10 mark. Named captain as a junior Jan led Vandy to a 20-6 record and second in the SEC.

WILLIE WISE

For Willie Wise, as much as any Squire, 1975-76 represents a rebirth. Behind him and fading from memory is the season past. He had found his situation in Utah intolerable and chose to sit out. In February he came to Virginia only to have what was left of the season cut to 16 games by a broken finger.

Now there are new faces around him — talented players — and Wise, by his reckoning, emerges a better player. "I'm a team player," he says. "I can play one-on-one, but not like Dr. J. I like to roll off picks, get the whole team moving, My game is total involvement." And with the rest of the cast, Wise envisions a winning future. "I'm extremely optimistic. We've got the ingredients to put together a real good team."

Wise's debut as a Squire was an auspicious one. He scored 30 points against St. Louis, and afterwards Spirits' Coach Bob MacKinnon said, "Listen, he's right up there with George McGinnis and Julius Erving as the best ever in the ABA. What he did didn't really surprise me."

But Wise admits he was not really in shape to do the job properly. "I'd been sick and wasn't in good condition. I had been sick just before coming to Virginia. I did well in the first game because my adrenalin was really flowing. I was so happy to be back playing again. I knew it had to go downhill, though, and it did." Still, before his injury he averaged 20.9 points.

Oddly enough, this man that Sports Illustrated's Peter Carry said "may be the best all-around forward in the pros" began his career as a virtual unknown.

The Drake University graduate, who had led his team to the NCAA semifinals as a senior, was drafted in the fourth round by his hometown team, the NBA San Francisco Warriors. There was a problem, however, and while Wise was a confident young man, he also was a realist.

"When I checked the Warriors' roster," he said, "I discovered that eight of their 12 players had 'no-cut' contracts. I was told there was just one opening. The odds were not good." So he began a letter-writing campaign, and Bill Sharman, coach of the ABA Los Angeles Stars, said he'd give Willie a chance.

DAVID VAUGHN

He was introduced as "one of the cornerstones on which we will rebuild this franchise" and because it was necessary to insure this tall, thin 22-year-old center with just a year of college varsity experience behind him sufficient playing time, the Squires traded away veteran center Jim Eakins. There was a lot of pressure on David Vaughn, and on occasions he responded remarkably well.

There were games when he rebounded and blocked shots like the best of the seasoned pros—twice he had 21 rebounds in a game and four times he blocked five shots—and there were times when he pumped in more points than were expected of him. Early in the season he stunned Indiana with 27.

There were other times, too, when the inexperience showed. But in 83 professional games, 80 of them as a starter, Vaughn averaged 11.7 points, 10.8 rebounds (ninth best in the league) and blocked 126 shots. Really not bad credentials for a rookie.

Vaughn played a freshman season and as a sophomore from the Oral Roberts University varsity before transferring and sitting out a season at Nevada Las Vegas. Before he became eligible at Nevada, however, he decided to turn pro—"it's been my ambition since I was about 10 years old," he said—and signed a multi-year contract with the Squires. He had averaged 32.2 points and 23.1 rebounds as a ORU freshman and 19.2 points and 14.2 rebounds for the varsity.

During the summer Vaughn was involved in an altercation with the Chesapeake Police, which seemed to all who know the quiet, gentle young man to have been totally out of character. Vaughn was shot and hospitalized for some time after the incident, but recovered in time to join the team at the beginning of pre-season workouts. He was used sparingly during the exhibition season.
